

What do the nursery license/plant sale permit fees support?

License fees, along with charges for certain types of inspections, help support the Washington State Nursery Inspection Program.

Inspections help protect the nursery industry, as well as the consumer, by ensuring horticultural plants offered for sale are free from infestation by pests and diseases, are properly labeled and are not otherwise damaged or dying.

Plant Services Inspectors also enforce agricultural quarantines to keep out such exotic pests as Japanese beetle and Asian gypsy moth, as well as provide inspection services to allow shipment of Washington nursery products to other states and countries.

Are there penalties for license/permit violations?

Yes, persons who violate the license/permit requirements are subject to a civil penalty up to $1,000. Violations may also result in a license or permit being denied, suspended or revoked.

LICENSING REQUIREMENTS FOR SALE OF PLANT MATERIALS IN WASHINGTON STATE

Horticultural Plants and Facilities—
Inspection & Licensing

RCW 15.13

Washington State
Department of Agriculture
Plant Protection Division
Revised January 2010

Who must obtain a nursery license?

Any person who handles or sells horticultural plants is considered a “nursery dealer” and is required by law to have a license for each place of business where horticultural plants are sold. This includes wholesalers, retailers, growers, shippers and landscapers who sell or install plants as a part of their business.

What kind of businesses need a nursery license?

Here are some examples of businesses who are required to be licensed:

- Wholesale and retail nurseries, growers and garden centers.
- Landscapers who buy plants to install.
- Landscapers who hold or grow plants for later sale or installation.
- Maintenance companies who install plants for customers.
- Brokers located in Washington who buy and sell, but do not hold plants.
- Grocery and warehouse stores that offer plants for sale.
- Pet and aquarium stores that sell aquatic plants.

And others not listed above.

If you are still unsure if your business needs a nursery license, please contact us (360) 902-1874.

Can a business be exempt from nursery licensing?

Garden clubs, charitable non-profit associations, educational organizations and conservation districts, under certain conditions, are exempted from the licensing requirements (RCW 15.13.270), but they are required to have a plant sale permit.

Persons who sell only cut plant material and persons making casual or isolated sales that do not exceed $100 annually are exempted from licensing and permit requirements.

How is the nursery license fee determined?

Nursery license fees are based on gross sales in horticultural plants and whether a person is a retail or wholesale nursery dealer. Persons who conduct both retail and wholesale business are required to obtain a license for the class of sales with the highest gross business. For the current fee, refer to the chart listed below:

| CLASS | ANNUAL GROSS SALES | COST |
|------------|--------------------|-----------|
| Retailer | $100 - $2,500 | $50.40* |
| | $2,501 - $15,000 | $109.20* |
| | Over $15,000 | $218.40* |
| Wholesaler | $15,000 or under | $109.20* |
| | Over $15,000 | $218.40* |

Where do I get a plant sale permit?

Educational or non-profit groups may receive a plant sale permit by completing the permit application located on the agency website. To request an application or for questions regarding this permit and/or application process please contact Sierra Campbell at (360) 902-1874 or via email scampbell@agr.wa.gov. The fee is $6.70 per permit.

Where do I get a nursery license?

The Washington State Department of Licensing (DOL) is responsible for issuing nursery licenses in conjunction with their Master Business License Program. There are over 40 locations where nursery license applications can be obtained. To find the location nearest you or obtain an application and license by mail, call DOL at 360-664-1400 or apply online.

Where do I display the nursery license?

A separate nursery license must be posted in a conspicuous place at each location where horticultural plants are sold to the public.

When do I need to renew my nursery license?

Nursery licenses must be renewed annually. A late fee is charged for renewal license applications filed after the expiration date on the master business license.
